In the preparation of its "vision" document Nagorik Committee will work from three premises. First, people's aspirations: the committee will try to focus on people's perception of Bangladesh that they wish to see in simple words. Second: we will try to discuss the factors that should be added to the political process of socio-economic order to achieve the aspirations of the people. Thus, when a clearer picture emerges, we shall try to put forward before the government a program of implementation as to what should be accomplished in the first 100 days, then in three months and, finally, in a full year. Subsequently, we shall present the document to the political parties, and the politicians, for inclusion of the points in their respective manifestoes. Each political party shall prepare its own manifesto. We, on our part, hope to prepare a national manifesto based on your recommendations.

As you are aware, we started this program of dialogue through an opening ceremony held at Dhaka on 20 March. A number of Nagorik Committee members of 2006 also spoke on the occasion. One such eminent speaker was Dr. Md. Younus. One of his remarks, and parts of his speech, subsequently, were subjected to criticism. He spoke on behalf of the Nagorik Committee calling upon the people to give their verdict against professional politics. This was purely his personal opinion and not part of a formal speech. We should look for the essence of his remarks only. In the coming election we should encourage participation of honest, capable and courageous candidates. We believe that politicians alone should be engaged in politics, while the civil society should join them in order to establish the rights of the people. A question has come up as to who is the right candidate in terms of honesty and capability? We have emphasised a number of times that those are the candidates in whose favour people will cast their votes. We also have to accept the verdict of the people without any reservation whatsoever. But what we have to ensure is that the people are well informed about the candidates they are going to vote for. In order to select a capable candidate the mere selection of a candidate will not suffice, we also need to reform the electoral system.

You have been given the details of the needed reforms of the electoral and the political process printed in papers of two different colours. We shall appreciate it if you could kindly drop your written comments in the box. The papers you have in your possession are a compilation of the dialogues held so far at Comilla, Jessore and Mymensingh.

Dr. Capt (retd) Sirajul Islam

During our childhood we were told that democracy is: of the people, by the people and for the people but now the definition of democracy has changed, it is confined to leaders only. I am certain you all know why I have used the word "leaders". Since there is hardly any existence of democratic culture in any of the political parties I am doubtful about the extent to which democracy will flourish in this country. Besides, presently there is a competition between political parties to turn their parties into family concerns. I believe that in order to bring about a change in the prevailing state of the country each of the political parties has to proceed relying on its own committed workers.

Advocate Talukder Md. Younus

Every man has his aspirations and needs. However, it looks as though, in our case, there is no end to it. All we want is money and more money. Currently we are passing through a serious shortage in power supply. The other day I saw in a local daily that due to non production of power, after having spent Tk. 16 thousand crores, we ran into a shortfall of 1500 MGW. Who will answer for this? Due to total absence of accountability we are not able to change the fate of the nation, although some individuals are able to bring a change in their fortunes. I am in agreement with the Civil Society's standing on the issue of black money.

Corrupt people must be brought to justice. Although an independent Corruption Commission has been set up, over the past year and a half, it has not been able to institute a single case of corruption.

Dr. Mizanur Rahman

It is my earnest request to all parties that they should give the opportunity to an elected government to continue to hold its office for the entire term. Whether they should be re-elected, or not, should be left to the people. It is but natural that those who fail to deliver, and are not able to meet people's aspirations, will not be re-elected.

We have seen that the political parties often nominate people with black money, or ex-bureaucrats. This, in turn, results in huge expenditures during elections that later indirectly affect our budget. It is due to this undue impact on the budget that we frequently confront rising prices in the market place. I am not holding any individual responsible for it, but certainly there is a link between black money and rising costs.

Nurul Alam Farid

The civil society has to stand united against this curse where the elected representatives go back on their promises. Together we must raise the issue with the respective political parties. We wish to see honest people elected who would speak out about the welfare of the people.

Businessmen, who virtually control the entire business of the country, often lend money to nominees to meet the high costs of elections with the sole objective that, once elected, they will not only realize the money "invested" but also reap other benefits during the five year tenure of the concerned representatives. Our appeal is that both, the Election Commission and the Anti Corruption Commission be empowered to function freely.

Mir Muniruzzaman

We often hear that so and so is a good candidate yet at the same time people say that he, or she, would not be able to win the election. It is up to the political parties to remove this confusion and hesitation from the minds of the people. This is one of the reasons why people with black money are getting elected. In the past we have seen that school- teachers, professors and lawyers had been elected to the Parliament. We no longer see teachers, lawyers and professors coming forward to contest election. Businessmen have replaced them. There should be a reversal of this situation. Both, the ruling party and the opposition, are encouraging black money holders with the result that those actively engaged in field level politics are not getting nominations.

Rabeya Khatun

Here we have talked about capability of a candidate, to which I also wish to add that he, or she, must also be honest, intelligent, just and, above all, a patriot. The voters, too, have to be honest.

List Of Participants

We have discussed about the equal role of both men and women in elections, My question is, do we have an equal role for men and women? Out of 101 members of the political parties only five are women.

Second, we have seen that religious minorities barely exist, having no fundamental rights. Hardly a year passes when they are not fleeing the country. The oppression of the minorities is geared up right after the election. This has to be stopped, and the political parties have to undertake that responsibility. While the local governments have been made ineffective, the Union Parishads are no longer functioning; even the Upazila Parishads are closed down, even though there is a clear provision for Upazila Parishad in the constitution. This is simply due to the fact that all powers are concentrated in the hands of MPs.

A K M Shaheen

It is my apprehension that people having money, industrialists having muscle power, and people who have never been in politics may get nominations in the coming election. It is my request that this should not be allowed.

Under the present critical state of power supply, being an officer of the Power Board, I wish to recommend that each of the districts be provided with a small generating unit capable of producing 10 to 20 MGW of electricity. This will solve the electricity problem of the respective district. Each of the owners of the unit will independently operate for the respective districts. This will also make the work of the Power Development Board easier.

Nigar Sultana Honufa

My question is that half of our voters are women and if the number of seats for them is not increased then how can there be a competent candidate contesting election?

In the next session of the parliament the number of seats for women in the Parliament has to be raised to 100.

Advocate Munira Begum

We, who are trying to establish the rights of women, realize that a democratic environment is essential for our efforts to succeed. As a matter of fact, in the absence of any democratic culture, rights of no one can be established. It is, therefore, imperative that the next election be free and fair, and for that the civil society has to work collectively.

Sultana Kamal

We have forgotten to appreciate the efforts of any one. Whenever some one takes an initiative we become suspicious of him, and begin thinking that there must be an evil motive behind it. This is reflective of the fact that we have lost confidence in our own selves. It is my responsibility to see that honest and capable individuals govern the country. A question is often raised as to who would ensure this. The answer to that is we shall all collectively undertake that responsibility.

Prof. Md. Hanif

There are many conscious citizens beyond this forum in the rural areas; I believe we should exchange ideas with them too.

While the development of Bangladesh is based on agriculture, its future lies in the growth of industry. I would request Mr. Debapriya to include industry, too, alongside agriculture. With financial management comes the issue of the labour policy. RMG is our main item of industrial export; hence there should be a clear statement on the labour policy for its work force. Finally there should be a balanced representation in the Parliament based on various categories of profession.

M. Muazzam Hossain

At a time when everything in the country is on the verge of breaking down, river routes are being manipulated and narrowed down, the canals are being reduced to the size of narrow drains, the democratic character of politics is being turned into family politics, I welcome the venture undertaken by the Nagorik Committee. The Parliament, the Election Commission and the political parties are all interconnected with one another. Therefore, reforming of one will yield no results.

Dr. Syed Habibur Rahman

I would request that three issues receive our attention at this forum: health, education and agriculture. If we can develop these three sectors we shall be able to achieve economic emancipation. We all know that our farmers are not receiving subsidies. Even the finance minister has acknowledged that the farmers are not receiving the due subsidies. If the numerous systems of education, like the madrasa, cadet and the regular school systems continue, we shall never be able to improve the quality of our education. We should have a firm and definite education policy. It is unfortunate that we could not produce an education policy in 35 years.

Md. Ebaedul Huq Chan

Whoever goes to power considers that the secretariat belongs to him, and his party, and all trophies and lofty titles are his. But as soon as he joins the ranks of the opposition, he says that the people are the source of all power.

We have to discuss the issue of electing honest candidates. We should discuss what should be the qualities of an honest candidate. We have to reject the culture of religious extremism now in vogue in the country. We need to eradicate poverty. Every one has to be recognised for whatever little contribution he, or she, can make towards the development of the country.

S. M. Iqbal

I believe that many of us are thinking along those lines. There is no reason for despair despite the fact that we have to cross many hurdles before we can achieve our goals. Once we start the process people will ultimately rise to the occasion.

Syed Dulal

I wish to add to the Nagorik Committee's suggestions on the Election Commission that on the last day of the election campaign a joint meeting should be conducted, under the auspices of the Election Commission, where candidates of all parties will make a declaration of their overall personal conduct and honesty, and the way they will be accountable to the people once elected. Also to make a clear statement as to how they would work for the people of their respective constituencies.

There is no budgetary allocation for development in the fields of culture and drama. Even where the issue of our aspirations has been discussed there is not a single word about the development of drama.

Advocate Manabendra Batbyal

As a student of law I believe that in order to ensure accountability we have to establish the rule of law first. I am sure all of you have seen a news item in the TV wherein it has been shown that a bunch of people in Sylhet were going in a procession, with arms in their hands in broad day light, while the police and RAB merely stood by as spectators. On the other hand if I oppose this inaction of the law enforcers I shall be a victim of crossfire. If this is the situation then it will be difficult for us to come out of the prevailing state of affairs. It is indeed unfortunate that a number of military dictatorships have ruined our entire social order. It is they who are responsible for the present state of our country. Every time a candidate contests an election, and gets elected under a party manifesto, but (once elected) does not abide by the party manifesto. The time has come to ask each of these elected representatives as to what extent they have fulfilled the commitments made to the people, based upon which the people had voted in their favour? As educated citizens we should be able to ask this question, or else our frustrations will continue. When we find that our lawmakers are called Mr. ten percent, a lobbyist or brokers of Khas lands, we are ashamed of ourselves as citizens.

Debapriya Bhattacharya

Currently we are in the midst of discussing the manifestoes of the political parties. Once we complete these Nagorik dialogues we shall put forward the party manifestoes. This will be the main subject of work for CPD during the months of August and September.

Nikhil Sen

We all have to be imbued with the spirit that we all have some specific duties to perform. It is not enough to put the entire blame on the politicians. The politicians are no angels, they are human beings just like us. Here amongst us, we have intellectuals, and various categories of professionals, teachers, students, and journalists including lawyers. Let us ask ourselves as to whether or not we have fulfilled our obligations to the nation?

It is written here that religious minorities and various ethnic groups have equal rights. If you talk of equal rights then we have to bring changes to our Constitution. You will possibly argue by saying that Muslims are a majority in the country, my question then would be as to how a country, with a large distribution of population consisting of Buddhist, Christians, Jews, could be based on one single religion? Only the other day a small country like Nepal has turned into a secular one. Why are we distorting facts by saying that secularism means absence of religion. For all practical purposes religion is the heart of our souls. Why should a country, 90 percent of whose population are Muslims, require a constitutional seal of approval as a state religion? After what the minorities had been undergoing for the last 45 years who can talk of equality. If these inequalities are to be removed we have to bring about major changes in the society.

Md. Ahsan Habib Kamal

CPD, during its initiative on Election 2007, had once indicated that had it initiated the dialogue earlier there could be a possibility of discussing about holding an interim election. I believe it should not nurture such an idea. Admittedly, such a move could have reduced further looting of resources but at the same time it would have hindered the pace of development. Democracy is "Of the people, for the people and by the people". It has now become "Of the pocket, for the pocket, by the pocket". This is the condition of our country today. I would request the sponsors to turn their attention to the politicians of the past, and the present, who have amassed unprecedented wealth. At present we have 345 persons belonging to that category. A list should also be made of people of the past. Once you have compiled such a list, it should be made public. This will result in making the election transparent.

Mohsinul Islam Habul

Even after 35 years, our poor have become poorer. Whoever occupied the seat of power had amassed wealth through unfair means. In line with the previous speaker I wish to say that those who were in charge of administering the country have systematically plundered the wealth of the country. The looted resources should be returned to the national treasury. I am a teacher of economics and as far as I know most countries are under free market system, but I am of the opinion that this is not good for our economy.

M. Gholam Salek

We believe in democracy but at the same time we have to be in the seat of power. I believe in the form of democracy that will help me achieve my desired goal. But at the same time we should indulge in such politics and election that are reflective of the people's wishes, and help elect people of their choice. Therefore, let us support that capable candidate

Abdus Sattar

CPD has presented before us as to what should be the face of Bangladesh in the year 2021, but I wish to see that even earlier. The path for that has been shown by the people of Kansat, and our RMG workers, who make about 930 takas a month as wages, whereas the owners have made crores in profits by cheating on taxes. Many of them subsequently appear on the scene as candidates contesting elections. Appropriate measures should be taken against all such individuals. The present government has let black money holders off the hook after collecting a mere 7 percent in taxes. Let us identify the black money holders. A list should be prepared and actions must be taken against them. As soon as you declare Islam as the state religion the rest of the people, belonging to other religious faiths, become second class citizen. We demand scrapping of this provision from our Constitution.

Advocate Abdul Hye Mahbub

In the past when Pakistan was conspiring to destroy our culture, the intellectual community came forward to resist. Many of them gave their lives in 1971 and we gained our independence. Our politicians had assumed that these forces no longer existed. Taking advantage of this, the defeated political elements killed Sheikh Mujibar Rahman and promulgated Martial Law. My question is where was the Nagorik Committee at that time when all military and civil administration was trampling the passage of honest political process based on democratic principles? I am tempted to ask the leaders of the Nagorik Committee as to why they chose to remain silent at that time?

We need to say in clear terms whether or not the policy guidelines, that are often laid out by IMF and World Bank for running the country, are tantamount to interference in our internal affairs and whether they have the right to do so?

The way the politicians are talking it seems as though we have undertaken the sole responsibility of putting everything in order, but as a matter of fact we have stood behind them, with their explicit consent, keeping full faith in their leadership. All you have to do is to go through the sketches of each of the members of the committee, then you would come to know as to who contributed what during the various critical stages of the country. We have inducted each one of them into the committee after considerable thought, and taking into consideration their contributions, to the society. On the one hand you say that they have made no contributions on the other you are ready to describe them as the "conscience" of the nation. You cannot say two different things at the same time.

Advocate Hiran Kumar Das

Although a provision exists for boycotting the Parliament but, in my opinion, since Parliament is the only platform where one could talk about issues of people's interests, no elected MP should be allowed to abstain from the Parliament. If an MP feels that he, or she, can no longer repose trust in the Parliament, he, or she, should resign.

M. Hafizuddin Khan

It was quite possible for us to raise our per capita income to a thousand dollar but this has not been so due to lack of good governance. For establishing good governance we need to reform the Election Commission, the passage of electoral process etc. We have come here to listen to your opinions and discuss matters and exchange views with you.

The Election Commission had earlier prepared a voter list spending Tk. 160 crores which it has apparently misplaced. But we have a copy with us. Subsequently the Commission prepared yet another list, spending another Tk. 160 crores which has since been rejected by the people. As one belonging to the accounting profession I would say that the people responsible for this should be punished. Registration of political parties at present is optional but this should be made mandatory. As you all know we have topped the list of corrupt nations consecutively for five times. Although there is an independent anti-corruption commission, it has failed. Despite that we visited the commission on behalf of the Nagorik Committee. We asked the commission to carefully scrutinize the income tax returns submitted by those seeking to contest the election, and ascertain the correctness of the details provided.

Syed Gholam Mahmood

For 30 long years I served as a Commissioner of Barisal City Corporation and as Acting Chairman. Here you have talked about National Election 2007. I do not agree with you and wish to see the holding of local elections prior to that.

Mr. Mukherjee resigned from the party due to the failure of his party; Sonia Gandhi resigned after having been accused of receiving money from a profit making state enterprise. Later she was re-elected. Can we not create such examples?

Advocate Mujibar Rahman Talukder

My proposal is that reform of the electoral process should have the provision of a constituency to be based proportionate to the population in a specific locality.

Dr. A. K. M. Mukhlesur Rahman

If every common man realized that this was his country then this would not have been the condition of our country. Step by step we have lost that sense of belonging and the entire administrative control is now in the hands of the government. Today, the big political parties own us. We have to retrieve our rights. Unless a free and fair election is held we shall not be able to judge the honesty and competency of a candidate.

Enayet Pir Khan

It is indeed a shame for us that, today, politicians are tagged to corruption. Surely it is the politicians who will run the affairs of the state. It is they who will formulate the laws. However, prior to the election in 2007, we should consider what 2006 holds for us. People of the country in 2006 are in a state of shock and worried. The prices of essentials in the market are rising at an alarming rate going beyond the reach of the common man. There is scarcity of electricity, water and gas for domestic consumption. The country is on the verge of collapse. 73 percent profit earning RMG industry is on the way to ruination. This is the background against which we are going to hold the election of 2007. Mr. Aziz, the CEC, along with a few corrupt and partisan commissioners, is leading the country to destruction. In order to come out of this state of affairs our politicians have to play the key role. Bangladesh has a rich political heritage. Politicians have conducted politics with honesty and wisdom. But one of my friends pointed out to me that as many as four Martial Law Governments have pushed our country to ruination. Some one has said that Bangabandhu had forgiven the collaborators, but surely he did not forgive rapists and murderers.

Mujibar Rahman Sarwar

The Election Commission must be made accountable and it should be given adequate independent authority.

We are passing through a difficult time. The society stands divided. We must turn it into a unified one. Will the CPD undertake the task? It is the responsibility of the political parties to nominate competent candidates. A competent candidate is he who wins the election.

Since it is the people who will elect honest candidates, it is important that we also create awareness amongst them so that they are able to elect the right candidate. The main task ahead of us is development and for that we need to have a national consensus. A question has come up about ex-civil servants joining politics. We believe that if he, or she, first joins a political party at thana or district level, and later contests election, then it would be more acceptable.

I believe we have achieved considerable development. But what we want is a balanced development. It is an impossible task to fulfill the hopes and aspirations of everyone. If people unite on the question of their overall interests then it may be possible to achieve that goal. Today we, the politicians, have come under severe criticism simply because we have deviated from the path of our stated goal. It is the politicians who are responsible for upholding our independence, sovereignty, people's welfare and the Parliament etc. Therefore, if we are able to bring all the politicians on a single platform for a meaningful dialogue, it may be possible to solve many of the problems accumulated to date. It is my belief that the current initiative for electing a competent candidate will have a positive impact on the common man.

Political reforms

1. In order to drive people with black money out of election arena and elect honest and capable candidates, alongside reforming of the Election Commission we need to bring about reforms in politics.
 2. Each of the political parties has to rely more on its honest and dedicated workers than its muscle power.
 3. The opportunity created in the last budget for turning black money into white has to be rescinded since it will encourage the use of black money.
 4. There should be a compulsory provision for retired Secretaries and Army Generals to enter politics at local levels, and work there for at minimum of five years.
 5. The political parties have to shun the path of conflict between themselves and refrain from enforcing hartals. They have to resolve their problems through dialogue and discussion. The legacy Opposition is making through boycotting of the Parliament is decreasing the possibilities of removing the differences of opinion in the future.
 6. We are still reeling under a 1500 MW shortage of power supply despite the fact that, to date, as much as 1600 crores of taka have been spent out of the budgetary provision of 2006. There should a provision for transparency of operations of the government on all such issues.
 7. Educational qualification is a vital factor for the MPs since they are engaged in formulating, analysing, revising and implementing laws for the country.
 8. There has to be a regular office at all levels of the union of the concerned MP so that he can make himself aware of people's concerns and their problems.
 9. Success of the election is dependent upon two factors, first to influence the political parties to nominate honest and capable candidates, second to create an extensive awareness to that effect amongst the public. The grass root level workers have to bring about pressure at the central leaders of the political parties to sit on the table and discuss. In other words we, the citizens, have to be honest and take due initiative in order to ensure accountable development and proper holding of election.
 10. 90 percent of our people live in villages, and the regional dialogues also have to be extended to villages and not confined to divisional towns only.
- #### Election Commission and reforming of the electoral process
11. In order for the Election Commission to carry out all the Constitutional obligations vested with it, it needs to be strengthened. In this regard the honesty of purpose, and neutrality of those engaged in the task of running the operations of the Commission, is of vital importance.
 12. The national Board of revenue could be entrusted with the task of reviewing the taxes paid by the candidates, and the history of their possible involvement in corruption.
 13. Preparation of the voter list should be a continuous process. Preparing a new list each time prior to the election is time consuming and results in wastage of government funds. People responsible for wasting over 160 crore takas in data collection of voters should be identified.
 14. For the holding of a proper election voter ID cards should be issued. This will reduce the chances of casting false votes.
 15. Arrangements have to be made for election campaigns to be conducted by the state, where all the candidates will address the people from a single platform. This will, in turn, put a stop to the use of black money and muscle power.
 16. If the people do not find a competent candidate to vote for, they should have the opportunity of casting a "no" vote. If more than 50 percent "no" votes are registered against a candidate, there should be a provision for holding a re-election, and at the same time people should have the right to bring a vote of no confidence against the particular candidate.
 17. The cancellation of the present voter list has created doubts about the competence and the working of the Election Commission. It will, thus, be only appropriate for the Chief election Commissioner to resign voluntarily in the interest of free and fair election.
 18. Women are under-represented in the Administrative systems of the country. The women's seats at the Parliament should be raised to 100.
 19. In order to ensure proper and fair election an observation team needs to be constituted consisting of members from the civil society.

You have said that we had held discussions in Comilla, Jessore and Mymensingh and that we should now hold a dialogue with the politicians and the parliamentary committees. My point is that we can have a dialogue only when you tell the politicians likewise.

Sajjad Sharif

I would hope that the issues that will ultimately emerge from the various Nagorik dialogues will work as a milepost for us so that in time to come we can look back and find directions for the future.

Prof. Syed Aminul Huq

I believe, from the discussions held, a direction has emerged and for that reason I believe that this dialogue has been a success. But it is true that each one of us must have the opportunity of carrying out his, or her, individual responsibilities.

Although laws exist against money laundering then how is it possible to turn black money into white? I believe we should come to a point of understanding on this issue. We have suggested that a list should be prepared of all black money holders. In this regard I wish to draw your attention to the ruling given by the High Court, in 2005, about the kinds of details that have to be provided by a candidate. If the details, as specified in the law, are provided properly then everything will come to light. The EC has to ensure that this law is implemented in full. Besides, the EC has to be neutral and considerably powerful.

Most of our development interventions are city based whereas majority of our people live in the villages, hence, if we are to have an all round development we need to involve all those poor people of the villages. We have achieved many things in this country, but we have failed to achieve two important things: First no government has ever undertaken any special initiative to build citizens of character, second, we have failed to create leaders, and leadership, capable of salvaging us from this debilitating state of affairs and creating opportunities for us to live in a healthy environment.
